Office Productivity Online Standard 2010 Ever lost all the numbers on your little sticky notes? So here's the solution. Office Productivity Online Standard 2010 or (abbreviated OOO) is a suite of Microsoft Office 2010 (10) products packaged with a web browser which can be used to access Microsoft Office 2010 functionality over the Internet. OOO is a web-based, open-source, a.wsf (standalone) file that anyone can use. The suite of products contained within OOO could easily be replaced with Microsoft Office 2007 at no additional cost. OOO was developed by Novell and today is maintained by the Google Summer of Code group. OOO itself is a product, which means it is a program (software) that users (1) can access over the Internet, but (2) which can be run on a computer(s) system in the same way as the version(s) contained in a Microsoft Office installation. OOO is not a redistributable product. This means that you can install OOO on a computer, but you can't redistribute the files. The following list describes some of the OOO features: * View Microsoft Office documents over the Internet: Documents can be viewed

Implicit versus explicit route learning: The role of speed of processing. The present research examined whether or not speed of processing (SOP) can account for the differential processing of implicit and explicit route learning. Participants were instructed to learn route information in either a time- or task-limited fashion (Experiment 1) or to learn the route as quickly as possible (Experiment 2). The speed of processing manipulation did not impact performance on the spatial judgment task, but significantly increased implicit route learning. This finding of facilitated implicit route learning by expedited learning is consistent with a speed-of-processing account of implicit learning. It is also consistent with findings from prior research demonstrating facilitated implicit route learning by expedited learning. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to computer network management and in particular, but not exclusively, to the optimization of routing resources using priority-based data traffic shaping. 2. Cytology and pathophysiology of equine laryngeal leiomyomata. Pathologic findings in three laryngeal leiomyomata in horses are described. Two horses were aged 1 and 2 years; one horse was aged 4 years. The most significant abnormality found at necropsy in all three horses was submucosal neoplasia. The first horse had a median submucosal mass of 1.5 x 1.5 cm. In the second horse, there was a 1.6 x 1.5 x 1.0-cm mass on the ventral surface of the left arytenoid cartilage. In the third horse, there was a 1.5 x 1.0-cm mass on the ventral surface of the right arytenoid cartilage. Microscopically, the masses consisted of large, plexiform spindle cell neoplasms. Desmoplasia and necrosis were common features. Immunohistochemical stains for desmin, S-100 protein, and CD34 were positive in the neoplastic cells. These neoplasms were classified as laryngeal leiomyomata based on their microscopic appearance. A second, less common neoplasm occurred as multiple foci scattered along the ventral aspect of the left arytenoid cartilage in the first horse. Microscopically, there were multiple nodular, 2.0 x 0.5- to 1.0-cm neoplasms that consisted of neoplastic spindle cells that were immunoreactive for desmin, S-100 protein, and CD34. Mitotic figures, necrosis, and cellular atypia were present in the neoplasms. The affected arytenoid cartilage was soft and pliable. In the third horse, there was a 2.0 x 1.5-cm mass on the posterior surface of the right arytenoid cartilage. Histologically, the mass was composed of neoplastic spindle cell lesions with similar features to those seen in the first
