What's new in Javva Juice:

Planet Automata is a global citizen science effort tracking more than a quarter of a million asteroids that pass in front of a distant star. Its goal is to use the light collected to create an even more detailed model of the planetary system that hosts the star. Image: At the time of writing, the project received 50 times more observations than the previous largest citizen science project, the Large Synoptic Survey Telescope Survey of the night sky. The project is headed by Alice Bodnar, one of the co-founders of Wizspace. It is aimed at students aged 14-18. The project aims to look at about 40,000 asteroids annually over the next 12 years. Credit: Alice Bodnar Planetary flybys, like the meteor-like observations we make with our eyes, flash in front of stars near the plane of the Solar System at a rate of about one per six weeks. A team of planetary scientists decided to create a citizen science project to study the images collected. The team, which included former BBC science correspondent Martin Rees, is headed by Alice Bodnar, one of the co-founders of UK science outreach organisation Wizspace, which she describes as “a cross between the BBC and an indie rock band.” In an interview with Astro-Curacao, Bodnar spoke about the dangers of out of the way asteroids, and how the project aims to educate people about the out of the way objects in the Solar System. Bodnar says that the names of the asteroids tracked by the project include those that have major consequences for life in the Solar System. “I’m old enough to remember what these things did,” she says. “They were very dramatic. [The Early Warning System] was pretty well attended at the time. But The Shoemaker-Levy 9 impacts were probably the biggest asteroid events in the last 20 years. It was really scary, and I’m not sure the science community had to go and inform the public properly.” The project invites participants of the age of 14-18 from the UK, US, and Brazil to take pictures of the asteroids. Scientists then re-create images of the targets from collected material. Rewards are available for the best images. The images are sent to a specialised supercomputer, nCrowd, which counts the numbers of asteroids included in the project and displays them on a planetary map. The image of UTD-IAS-02h29

Table ayaoshi (table side-on ayaoshi) is a big-headed yōkai (Japanese monster) with a cock. I think that's why the name is like this. This yōkai is also a very cute and friendly creature, and it sucks on children's umbrellas and makes them pop, so no one can get mad at it. But one day, the yōkai disappeared. You become a yōkai hunter and begin your adventure to find the yōkai's yokai collection and find out its name. The only character of this game is you. If you find a beautiful girl, you will attract her when you make a bow. If you encounter an enemy (Vampire), you can fight it with your bow. As you pass over bugs, you'll be able to see its yōkai value. But if you say a "Hello", you'll get a resistance bonus to your attack. You can use the items in the shop to buy various yōkai hunting items, such as a hunting-pill, animal horn, and so on. Once you've finished the story, you can replay all the scenes where you encounter and use these items as many times as you like. If you buy all the items, you can save your progress in multiple file formats. For example, you can export the game to the PS4, and play it on your PS Vita. This game was first released on the Playstation Vita platform. Its version on the Nintendo Switch and the iOS / Android platforms are updated version of the game.
